ALBUQUERQUE JOINS CITIES AROUND THE COUNTRY IN RESPONSE TO OVERDOSE DEATHS IN BLACK COMMUNITIES

New Campaign Promotes Overdose-Reversing Naloxone in Seven U.S. Cities: Albuquerque, NM; Philadelphia; Louisville, KY; Durham, NC; Milwaukee, WI; Newark, and Detroit, MI

ALBUQUERQUE – In the wake of a decade-long surge in drug overdose deaths among Black Americans nationwide, a coalition of Black community leaders, government officials, and health experts in Albuquerque and across seven cities today launched You Have the Power to Save Lives, a campaign to promote the use of the overdose-reversing naloxone in Black communities.

A ZOOM press conference and rally was held today with media and community, civic, and government leaders from the target cities. A video of the press conference will be available after the event HERE.

The campaign also released a report consolidating recent evidence that illustrates the need for urgent action to save lives, finding:

- New Mexico's drug overdose death rate has been one of the highest in the nation for most of the last two decades.

- In Bernalillo County, where Albuquerque is located, there were 70 overdose deaths per 100,000 Black residents from 2017 to 2021.
- Overdose is the leading cause of preventable death for Black adults in the United States, surpassing gun violence and car crashes. In many cities, older Black men are four times more likely to die of overdose than other men in their age group.
- Overdose rates in Black communities have been rising for the past ten years but have skyrocketed since 2020 when overdose rates in the Black population overtook rates in the white population.
- Nationwide, there has been a recent 24% decline in overdose deaths, but data suggests the number of deaths in Black communities remains disproportionately high and calls for equitable investment and focus on health interventions to address this problem.

The campaign, with its strong focus on community engagement, focuses on activating community leaders in Black communities to expand the availability and utilization of naloxone, a lifesaving, overdose-reversing nasal spray medication. At the heart of the campaign is a new website –YouCanSaveLives.org – where people can find out where to get naloxone near them, hear powerful, real-world testimonials, and take action to spread the word about the importance of naloxone.

“Black families and individuals are not receiving critical, life-saving information about naloxone that can reduce overdose deaths in Albuquerque,” said Stacy Burleson, Executive Director of Women in Leadership. “As a result, Black overdose deaths have increased over the last decade while overall deaths have declined. The You Have the Power to Save Lives campaign is using multiple communications channels to reach the men, women, and youths in our neighborhoods and help them learn about naloxone and how it can save lives. It can be a difference maker in our community.”

Lisa R. Sedillo-White, Deputy County Manager for Bernalillo County, added: “The campaign can play an instrumental role in saving lives. Too many people have died needlessly. Making the overdose-reversing nasal spray naloxone widely available is a harm prevention strategy that is proven to reduce deaths. Naloxone can mean the difference between an overdose death and a second chance. We are working with Vital Strategies to give people those second chances.”

Supported by public health organization Vital Strategies, with funding from the Elton John AIDS Foundation, the campaign includes more than a dozen community groups, health organizations, and local government agencies. Their efforts focus on establishing new naloxone distribution points in Black communities—including neighborhood gathering spaces and local health providers—to reduce stigma around carrying naloxone and empower individuals to save lives in the event of an overdose.

The seven cities participating are Albuquerque, New Mexico; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Louisville, Kentucky; Durham, North Carolina; Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Newark, New Jersey; and Detroit, Michigan.

The campaign wants to ensure that residents are aware of free naloxone, motivated to get it and use it, and inspired to share about this resource with their communities.

YouCanSaveLives.org directs visitors to locations in their neighborhoods where naloxone is available and provides information on the medication, its benefits, and its use.

“We are cautiously optimistic about declining overdose death rates nationally, but after years of skyrocketing rates, the wide disparities experienced by Black communities are raising the alarm,” emphasized Daliah Heller, Vice President for Overdose Prevention Initiatives at Vital Strategies. “Rates are higher among Black adults than their white counterparts; we urgently need equitable and focused strategies. This campaign is making lifesaving naloxone more widely available in Black communities in Albuquerque and six other cities, and mobilizing Black people to carry it to protect friends, family, and community.”

Naloxone is a life-saving medication that reverses the effects of an opioid-related overdose within minutes. Available over-the-counter as a nasal spray, naloxone is safe and easy to use. Opioids relieve pain by attaching and activating specific receptors in the brain. Naloxone reverses opioid overdoses by blocking the receptors and preventing opioids from attaching. Naloxone can be purchased over the counter at pharmacies and is available for free through community distribution sites. It can be administered as a nasal spray without any specialized training.
